In the Fast Lane

With more than 200,000 drive-thru restaurants in America alone, it's easy to see how much people love picking up a meal at a window. Maybe it's because we're so busy that we don't have time to order our meals inside. Or maybe we're just a little lazy. If you're looking for an excuse to grab some fast food, look no further than July 24, Drive-Thru Day.

Jack in the Box purports to have invented the first drive-thru in 1951 at its San Diego eatery. Others claim the drive-thru was conceived by two Texans, one a tobacco salesman and the other a doctor. They teamed up to open Kirby's Pig Stand drive-in restaurant in Dallas in 1921. Whether you drive-thru or drive-in, people have been eating in their cars ever since.

A Sticky Celebration

Lollipop. Sucker. Lolly. Sticky pop. Whatever you call them, Lollipop Day falls on July 20. Scientists tell us that even early humans enjoyed these treats, licking and sucking on honey on a stick. The term lollipops weren't used until 1931 when George Smith, owner of the Bradley Smith confectionary company, named a stick candy after his favorite racehorse, Lolly Pop. Some dispute this origin, however, because in England the word lolly means "tongue" and pop means "slap," so some think that the word lollipop, meaning "tongue slap," may have originated in England.

As to the invention of the lollipop itself, some say that in 1905 the McAviney Candy Company may have accidentally invented this hard candy on a stick. The process of boiling the candy required stirring with a stick. At the end of the day, the owner brought the candy-covered sticks home for his children. Three years later, he finally realized he was on to something and began marketing his "used candy sticks."

Mallets and Madness

During July, in the green parks of Portland, Oregon, you might hear deep and resounding thuds, along with the dainty tinkling of teacups. If so, you may have discovered the strange world of Mondo Croquet. The rules of this backyard lawn game are almost identical to the original game from England, complete with period costumes and a picnic of tea and finger sandwiches. But instead of mallets, players wield sledgehammers, and in lieu of small croquet balls, they knock bowling balls through massive steel hoops. Sure, the occasional bowling ball cracks under the pressure, but players are allowed to continue their round using the biggest remaining piece. And there is one additional rule: once a player finishes a round, they are allowed to continue play with the sole purpose of knocking out other players' balls. If that doesn't sound fair, it should be noted that fairness isn't the purpose of the game. The goal of the game is to have fun, and when it comes to Mondo Croquet, the bigger the fun the better!

Protecting the Wild

The International Ranger Federation, a worldwide consortium of park rangers and uniformed conservationists, was founded on July 31, 1992. In 2007, July 31 was officially dedicated as World Ranger

Day, a day to honor all the hardworking men and women who put their lives on the line to protect the world's wild places.

How should you celebrate? Visit a park and thank a ranger in person. Donate to your local park or conservation fund. Light a candle for the brave rangers who have died in the line of duty. After all, rangers have the responsibility of protecting over 100,000 parks and conservation areas worldwide. That's more than 10 percent of Earth's entire landmass!

A Canned Classic

Over the past 87 years, Spam—Hormel’s renowned meat product in a can—has transformed from a mere food into a worldwide pop culture phenomenon. On July 5, 1937, it was first introduced to the world as Hormel Spiced Meat, but shortly thereafter, Ken Daigneau entered the name Spam into a naming contest and won $100 for his efforts. Since then, over nine billion cans of Spam have been sold.

Spam was popular from the moment of its inception. Within one year of its introduction, 18 percent of all American households were enjoying the canned meat. However, it was during World War II that Spam really took off, as it was part of American army rations. Perhaps it is thanks to those American soldiers that the biggest consumers of Spam are residents of tiny islands that served as American military outposts: Guam, Hawaii, and the Northern Mariana Islands. The average Guamanian eats 16 cans of Spam a year. Spam is incorporated into family recipes, eaten at restaurants, and can even be found on burgers at McDonald’s and Burger King. Spam is so popular in Hawaii that it is called “The Hawaiian Steak,” and other canned meats, such as Armor Treat, are not nearly as popular.

Why has Spam become such a celebrated piece of Americana? Was it the now famous 1970 sketch by Britain’s comedy troupe Monty Python that launched Spam to international stardom? Or is it the curiosity surrounding the meaning of its name or the mystery of its ingredients? We may never know why Spam has become so popular, but the Smithsonian has taken the lead in immortalizing it. Two cans of Spam, one bearing the original packaging and another with an updated design, have been added to the museum’s exhaustive collection. It may satisfy Spam’s devoted followers to know that their favorite canned meat product is a work of art.
